Chogyam Trungpa was known as 'the bad boy of Buddhism'; he brought Tibetan Buddhism to the West and shattered notions about how an enlightened teacher should behave. 20 years after his death, Trungpa's name still evokes admiration & outrage.

"Trungpa was the embodiment of living outside the box." comments Victoria Shambala Director Layth Matthews, who spent time studying with the notorious Tibetan. "He made hippies wear suits and suits camp like hippies. Now, every Tibetan Lama who wishes to teach in the west closely studies his teachings. When he published Shambhala: the Sacred Path of the Warrior (1984), he created a time bomb of enlightenment. In a world ripe for his outrageous teachings, that time bomb is about to go off."
